Medullary lesions in the lateral hypothalamus induced by injection of neurotoxin in the ventral tegmental area: effect on feeding behaviour and on food intake. Rats were injected with either the neurotoxin 5,7-dihydroxytryptamine (5,7-DHT) or kainic acid into the lateral hypothalamus (LH) in combination with the ventral tegmental area (VTA) in order to produce lesions in the medullary component of the LH. The basal levels of food intake, feeding in a two-choice situation and body weight were not affected by these treatments. However, selective LH lesions were found in VTA-injected animals. We next injected neurotoxins into the VTA of LH-lesioned rats in order to determine whether LH lesions were sufficient to affect feeding behaviour. We found that lesions in the VTA after LH damage significantly (P Acute and stable opiate addition on opiate withdrawal. Abstract Substance abuse is a serious worldwide problem.
