Structure-activity relationships (SAR) are well known to be invaluable for the structure-based design of novel drugs. In the present study, by employing a molecular modeling approach, several novel, potent, and selective D2-like dopamine receptor antagonists were identified on the basis of the structure of the D2-selective ligand haloperidol. Using the newly designed compound 2a and its novel derivatives as templates, a series of new D2-like dopamine receptor antagonists were generated. Representative compounds 2d, 2f, 2h, and 2j of this series were determined to be partial agonists with affinities in the micromolar range, with ratios close to those of the corresponding full agonists, for the rat [(3)H]spiperone binding assay.
