The development of the John Deere Drive Green is based on the five most common causes of baler jams: twisting, wrinkling, clogging, slippage and severe imbalances. Each is tackled through an array of components and mechanisms. Typical weak points are addressed so that no jams can occur. The V461R Round baler features two wide 573-mm (22.56-in.) belts, meaning that only three free spaces are observed (one between the two belts plus one on each belt side). Using two belts optimizes bale coverage by approximately 4 percent. The result is significant crop loss limitation and more efficient baling process. In order to handle huge stress transmitted by the density arm, the belts have no lacers. An advanced belt tracking system, including wide front pulleys and several guides located throughout the chamber, ensures accurate belt positioning, even when working in slopes or when overloading one pickup side. All edges of parts potentially in contact with the belts are chamfered to avoid belt side damage. A take-up arm manages belt tension compensation during the unloading process to avoid potential belt tracking issues. Belts are driven by two large-diameter rubber rolls with a large contact surface that avoid belt slippage in very wet conditions. Springs linked to the density arm are located on both chamber sides and give enough tension to the belts from bale starting. To limit crops from sticking, belts feature a smooth pattern. Paddles on the belts driving rolls, cleaning augers into the density arm, and other scrapers located in several places through the belts paths continuously clean the belts and remove crop accumulation around the bale chamber.
