The milk lipid transfer proteins (MTs) are major products of mammalian mammary gland and contribute to milk lipid secretion and neonatal nutrition. Here, we investigated the physiological role of MTs in the endometrium and mammary gland. Specific antibody was generated against bovine MT5, and the localization in endometrium and mammary gland was examined. MT5 protein was expressed both in endometrial and mammary gland in bovine and human. MT5 knockdown by using MT5-targeted small interfering RNA in bovine mammary epithelial cells (BoMECs) decreased milk lipid secretion. Bovine endometrial epithelial cell (BoEC)-conditioned medium altered milk fat secretion. MT5 knockdown in BoMECs reduced MT5 protein expression. Recombinant human MT5 protein restored the milk fat secretion in MT5-knockdown BoMECs. Notably, we found a compensatory response between the endometrial and mammary gland MTs in terms of milk lipid secretion in bovine. The results of the present study suggest that MT5 plays an important role in lactation via milk lipid secretion, and MT5 from endometrium and mammary gland may compensate for each other.Q: Url.Action to action ID MVC Hi I am using MVC3.
